

Daphne Norden worked for seven years teaching biochemistry at the University of London and for 15 years at the University of Zimbabwe before entering the Medical Mission Sisters. With the Movement for a Better World she promoted the value of Christian community. After two years in London with an interdenominational hospital chaplaincy team, she went to Karachi, Pakistan, and worked as a counsellor with nursing students and in hospital ministry. She returned to London where she served in leadership roles for 12 years. Her principal involvements have been mission promotion, organising and giving mission appeals, working for justice for the marginalised, and editing the magazine Medical Mission News.
